Introduction to Scripophily

Scripophily (noun):

“The study and collection of old stock and bond certificates, valued for their historical, artistic, or financial significance.”

Stock/Bond (noun):

“Stocks represent ownership in a company, while bonds are debt instruments issued by companies or governments.”

Financial History

Stock and bond certificates reflect key moments in economic, industrial, and political history.

Art in Print

Engraved vignettes, detailed borders, and period typography turn certificates into collectible art.

Global community

Collectors exchange knowledge, trade, and uncover hidden stories through ongoing research and interaction.
